Admission decisions

Test results, high school grades, academic preparation, out-of-class accomplishments, special interests, and future plans—these and other kinds of information help admission officials identify applicants who can benefit most from their programs.

Course placement

Colleges usually try to take into account individual strengths and weaknesses as they place students in freshman-year courses. For example, a college may offer three sections of a subject—developmental, regular, and advanced. A student's test results, academic background, and high school grades might be used to determine which section would be most appropriate.

Academic advising

College academic advisers may consider test results, high school academic program, high school grades, college grade estimates, planned extracurricular activities, areas in which there is a need for help, and part-time employment plans to help a student tailor an appropriate program of study.

Scholarships and loans

Some scholarship and loan agencies may use test results and grade predictions, with other information such as high school grades, to identify qualified candidates. However, the agencies may not look only at academic potential. The ACT score report provides information about a student's educational needs, extracurricular achievements, and educational plans. This information, along with high school grades and test scores, helps the agencies evaluate applications for scholarships, loans, and other financial assistance.

TESTING ACCOMMODATIONS

If you are seeking accommodations for SAT/ACT testing due to an IEP or 504 plan, please sign up for the test during August to May. CollegeBoard and ACT.org determines accommodations for students with disabilities.

PERT

- Florida community colleges administer the PERT, which is a college placement test.
- The test is generally administered on the computer.
- The test measures reading, writing, and algebra skills.
